"You don't have a capability problem. You have a permission problem."

More you, not new.

Yrmis Barroeta is a world-class speaker, entrepreneur and founder across the unrelated worlds of food, fashion and wellness tech, turning personal crises and market gaps into magnetic brands.

Raised on a nature reserve in Venezuela and trained as an economist, she is a thought leader helping teams defeat technostress and unlock an innovation mindset — equipping audiences to act decisively when conditions change and fluency breaks.

Grounded in economics and design, she has cultivated the craft of translating complex concepts into compelling narratives that bridge the adoption gap between innovation and real-world use — on stages from large to intimate, sharing the spotlight with leaders in technology, health, business and bioscience.

- Founder of four companies built from unmet needs, personal crises and market gaps
- TEDx San Francisco speaker on turning a personal health journey into a thriving, community-driven business
- Five-time Parsons "Teacher of the Year" for Business & Entrepreneurship
- Creator of the proprietary CLICK framework for innovation under technostress
- Advisor to leaders navigating AI-driven change, performance pressure and burnout
- Founder & Editor of 1•1•1 Signals — innovation, technostress and human performance

NAVIGATING TECHNOSTRESS. BUILDING ADAPTIVE LEADERS. · 45–90 MIN · IN PERSON OR ONLINE

In today's accelerating world of AI disruption and constant change, the pressure to innovate often triggers technostress, burnout and stalled performance.

Delivered through vivid real-world stories, sharp insight and a touch of humor, the keynote draws on lessons from living in multiple countries and founding four companies across industries — showing how innovation actually happens when fluency breaks and conditions are uncertain.

Whether in person or online, it energizes audiences to focus under pressure, adapt with purpose, embrace AI and innovation, and lead decisively with resilience as technology accelerates into a lasting organizational advantage.

At its core, the proprietary CLICK framework reactivates five intrinsically human cognitive switches:

- Curiosity
- Labels into Lenses
- Ingenuity
- Criticism
- Kickstart under uncertainty

Together, they turn problem-solving into a repeatable skill rather than a reactive effort.

DESIGNED FOR ORGANIZATIONS WHERE

High-performing teams are burning out or disengaging under relentless pressure.

Momentum is slipping as constant change outpaces teams' ability to adapt.

Technical skill alone no longer protects teams from technostress.

Topics

- Technostress & the future of work
- AI adoption & digital transformation
- Change management and leadership
- Innovation and disruptive thinking
- Problem solving & corporate culture
- Human performance, resilience & tech burnout

FORMATS

Keynote — all-hands, kickoffs, summits (45–90 min).
Leadership offsite — half day to two days, working CLICK on your real rollout.
Podcast guest — the story listeners can't unhear.

Key takeaways

- Reignited curiosity as the cognitive driver of innovation — reducing defensive thinking and unlocking creative outcomes.
- Elevated collective intelligence — tools to legitimize cross-functional experience, increasing confidence and psychological safety.
- Practical problem-solving tools using reasoning and pattern recognition in high-uncertainty environments, rather than waiting to "know enough."
- A mindset shift from hesitation to adaptive execution — restoring resilience and decision quality under pressure.
- Uncertainty reframed as a native human operating condition — something to lead through, not eliminate.
- A shared language teams use to name technostress, interrupt unproductive patterns and return to CLICKing.
- Renewed confidence in personal and team relevance — replacing fear of falling behind AI with confidence in the ability to adapt.

WHAT AUDIENCES EXPERIENCE

A story-rich, high-energy keynote blending real-world insight and humor — shaped by years observing patterns in wildlife and translating them into modern leadership, innovation and practical tools to defeat technostress.

WHAT MAKES IT DIFFERENT

It names technostress — a modern, often unspoken mental state accelerating with AI. Instead of adding more technology, it reactivates deeply human traits that have been trained out, yet are essential for staying relevant, creative and innovative.

WHAT TEAMS LEAVE WITH

Clear tools to defeat technostress, make innovation repeatable, and lead decisively even when expertise no longer applies.

What rooms say after.

"Yrmis delivered an engaging and masterful keynote — packed with powerful insights and teachings that stay with you long after the event."

ANADEL ALBERTI · CEO & FOUNDER, AUDACIOUSLY AUTHENTIC · MIAMI

"Yrmis doesn't just give a talk — she invites you into an experience. She has this incredible way of taking big, complex ideas and making them feel personal, human, and deeply inspiring. If you're looking for a speaker who brings both heart and brilliance to the stage, Yrmis is the one."

ALLIÉ MCGUIRE · CEO & CO-FOUNDER, AWARENOW MEDIA · MICHIGAN

"Her creativity flows like a river finding its way. Her adaptability and her problem-solving is as instinctive as survival in the wild. She shows that obstacles can become adventures, and that we all have the power to contribute to innovation."

VANESSA DUARTE · CHEMIST, FOOD SCIENCE & ANTI-INFLAMMATORY NUTRITION · MONTREAL

"Thank you for your inspiring talk at the Creativity Conference. It was truly a highlight of the event."

UNA DISEÑADORA CON PANTALONES
LA VENEZOLANA YRMIS BARROETA ABRIÓ UNA TIENDA EN EL SOHO NEOYORQUINO DONDE SUS PANTALONES CUELGAN DE GANCHOS DE CARNICERÍA. EN TAN SÓLO TRES MESES, LA REVISTA TIME OUT LA SEÑALÓ ENTRE LOS 10 LUGARES MÁS EN BOGA QUE ABRIERON EN 2007

LA CHICA DE LOS PANTALONES

Una venezolana le toma el ruedo a la Gran Manzana

Desde Hem, su boutique en Soho, la caraqueña Yrmis Barroeta ha logrado entallarle sus pantalones a cada vez más neoyorquinos. Recientemente la revista Time Out incluyó su tienda entre las 10 más en boga que abrieron en 2007 en Nueva York. Esta diseñadora de moda, que cosió su formación en Parsons, reconoce que el camino es arduo. "En esta ciudad es muy difícil hacerse un nombre en la industria de la moda, pero es posible"

"OH! THE PANTS LADY", voceaba con entusiasmo la encargada de compras de una tienda de Estados Unidos cada vez que la diseñadora venezolana Yrmis Barroeta arribaba al establecimiento. Esos eran los días en los que, a dos piernas y con sus pantalones puestos, ofrecía sus diseños en pequeñas boutiques de young contemporary designers (jóvenes diseñadores contemporáneos). "Soy fanática de los pantalones. La gente se ha olvidado de esta pieza. Es difícil encontrar uno que te quede bien", confiesa "la chica de los pantalones". Con estampa de geisha del trópico, Barroeta de 33 años, habla con un verbo diluido y alegre, deja escapar una que otra risa que repica, a la vez que disfruta gustosa un café con leche que extraña cuando está en Nueva York.

Para situar su marca, la venezolana viajaba, visitaba clientes y se aparecía en las tiendas sin cita pautada ¡Y vendía! En una temporada sus pantalones colgaban en los ganchos de 30 tiendas de Estados Unidos, en ciudades disímiles como New Jersey, Atlanta, Texas, California, Seattle y Chicago. Nueva York todavía se le hacía esquiva. Pero ella no se derrengó ante la competida y avasallante Gran Manzana. Su espíritu de emprendedora incombustible la ayudó. Sabía que su destino se cosería a puntadas en NYC entre cierres, ruedos, perneras y pretinas. "En Nueva York es muy difícil hacerse un nombre en la industria de la moda, pero es posible". Parece que sí. Sus pantalones, sexys y modernos –"atrevidos y versátiles", según ella misma explica– cuelgan ahora en tienda propia en Soho, pero no en percheros, sino en los garfios que usan en los frigoríficos para sostener reses crudas. Otros diseños están agolpados en una mesa de carnicería de 1920. "Mi papá es ganadero. Mi socia y yo queríamos un concepto industrial y nos inspiramos en una carnicería fashion".

Desde hace tres meses Barroeta junto a su amiga –y ahora socia–, la también diseñadora de moda Chistina Bohigian, tiene la boutique Hem (ruedo en español) en donde exhiben sus pantalones y dan espacio a los trabajos de otros diseñadores, entre ellos unos made in Venezuela: los accesorios
